

Bumitama's diary of destruction

Broken promises, land grabs and illegal palm oil in Indonesia

FACTSHEET | MARCH 2014

mobilize, resist, transform

Bumitama Agri Ltd is a palm oil producer in Indonesia. It supplies one of the largest global traders in palm oil, Wilmar International, and receives financial support from the largest banks in Europe and some of the biggest investors in the U.S. Palm oil is used in roughly half the food and cosmetics sold in the U.S., and in biofuels in Europe. The palm oil industry is among the leading drivers of forest destruction in the tropics today.

In 2013, Friends of the Earth published Commodity Crimes, a report charging Bumitama Agri with illegal forest destruction.¹ As of March 2014, despite numerous promises to clean up its act, Bumitama continues to produce illegal palm oil. Despite numerous promises to clean up its act, Bumitama continues to produce illegal palm oil. Satellite imagery and discussions with the company show that Bumitama continues to clear land despite promises to stop doing this within concession areas and manages a plantation without permits in place – bringing illegal palm oil into the supply chain with devastating environmental and social impacts.

The following timeline represents a diary of Bumitama's environmental crimes, focusing on two plantations: the Ladang Sawit Mas Plantation and Golden Youth Plantation in Ketapang district, West Kalimantan. Bumitama is also implicated in three unresolved complaints from the Roundtable on Sustainable Palm Oil in 2012 and 2013.²

European financiers like HSBC, Deutsche Bank and Amundi, and US financiers including MassMutual Financial Group, BlackRock, State Street Corporation, Fidelity Investments and TIAA-CREF are fully aware of the situation in Indonesia, yet do not act, or are ineffectual if they do. Rabobank has engaged with the company, but with no tangible results on the ground.³

Friends of the Earth calls on financiers to cancel their loans, withhold other financial services, and publicly commit to a moratorium on loans and the purchasing of shares in Bumitama, or any company associated with it.

Wilmar International, the largest buyer of Bumitama's palm oil and a significant shareholder, should break current contracts with the company and sell its shares.

In December 2013, Wilmar implemented a 'no deforestation, no peat, no exploitation policy',⁴ extending to third-party suppliers as well as its own operations. If this is anything more than an empty gesture, then Wilmar's first step should be to stop sourcing palm oil from Bumitama. The IOI palm oil company, which holds 30 percent of the shares in Bumitama, should also divest.

LSM: International Animal Rescue rescues two more orangutans from LSM and relocates them to the adjacent Gunung Tarak forest,¹² revealing continued threat to endangered orangutans.

Friends of the Earth makes financiers aware of the problems with Bumitama. Satellite images showing almost 500 hectares of land cleared between April and August 2013 in LSM (including in the marked HCV area, see fig 1), substantiating claims that Bumitama continues to ignore its commitment of April 2013 to stop all activities in LSM, and continues to ignore the requests made by RSPO from May and July 2013. Further evidence of the illegal GY plantation managed by Bumitama is also presented.

LSM: Bumitama commits again to stop all land clearing in LSM.¹³

November
2013

Friends of the Earth publishes the report Commodity Crimes showing ongoing land clearing since April in LSM plantation, and new evidence of palm oil production on GY Plantation under Bumitama's management without legal permits, thus producing illegal palm oil.¹⁴

2014

GY: Bumitama writes in a letter to Friends of the Earth: "The current owner has the experiences to continue with the procedural application to reinstate its permits and licenses," thereby admitting again that the legally required permits are not in place, and that therefore illegally produced palm oil is being brought to the market.

February

GY: Bumitama admits in a call with Friends of the Earth that the GY Plantation does not have the required permits, but refuse to release GY Plantation from their holdings or cease production within the concession.

LSM: Satellite images from November 2013 and February 2014 show that Bumitama's LSM plantation continues to clear land, in breach of its latest commitment to RSPO from October 2013.¹⁵ The imagery is shared by AidEnvironment with RSPO and shows land clearing inside and north of a water conservation area in LSM (fig 2).¹⁶

March

LSM: Bumitama shares its HCV Assessment of LSM plantation with Friends of the Earth. The assessment does not include an HCV area noted in previous maps, revealing that HCV forest was cleared between April and August, 2013.¹⁷
